

Power analysis and number of replication in the set-up of an experiment.

Prof. Marco Acutis
marco.acutis@unimi.it

DATE: April 16 2020, at 14:30.
Microsoft Teams virtual classroom

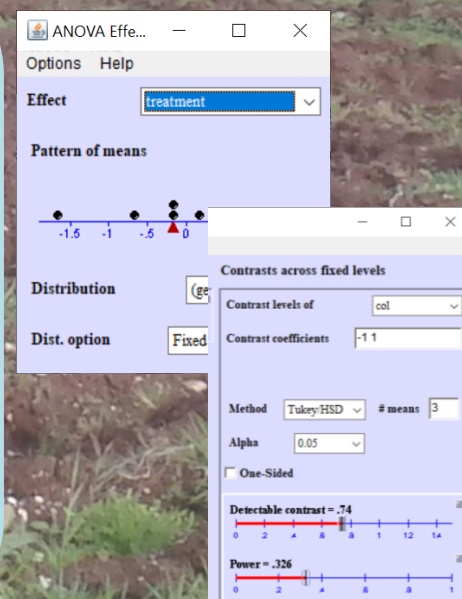

<https://teams.microsoft.com/j/channel/19%3aedc34fef0bb34e6e8c013e3122a4fe5%40thread.tacv2/Generale?groupId=8bda7df4-029a-4daa-b0a1-c4f18448793d&tenantId=13b55eef-7018-4674-a3d7-cc0db06d545c>

PIN: mndyre2

Researchers frequently ask questions like “How many replications do I need to set in my experiment?” or “Why my experiment does not produce significant results, even if treatments means appear different?”

Power analysis is an instrument that can answer these questions, which needs to be addressed while designing field or laboratory experiments.

This seminar shows the theoretical bases of power analysis and some practical application examples.

Please, download and install the software “PIFACE” from <http://homepage.divms.uiowa.edu/~rlenth/Power/piface.jar>

Marco Acutis, full professor at the Milano University, Dept. Agricultural and Environmental Sciences - Production, Landscape, Agroenergy, h-index 30 (Google scholar)

